Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Friday 31 Dec 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Unsettled, very mild at first.

Today:
Heavy rain moving northwards and becoming slow-moving across central Scotland, gradually easing. Rain clearing quickly eastwards across England and Wales to leave a blustery but very mild day with sunny spells.

Tonight:
Bands of cloud and rain moving northeastwards across most parts with clear spells in between.  Becoming windy in the west with coastal gales, but remaining mild.

Saturday:
A band of rain will move eastwards across most parts. Turning brighter in the west before  blustery showers develop later. Windy, with severe gales in the far northwest. Staying mild.

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:
Rather windy with sunny spells and showers, or some longer spells of rain. Turning colder from the north from Monday onward with snow showers developing across parts of Scotland.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.